

THE EDEN PROJECT

A Visitors Guide: The Eden Project

The Eden Project is an amazing place to go in Cornwall. It was first used for mining coal and rock but when there was no more to mine it left a huge scar in the landscape. Then the founder of the Eden project Tim Smit (who restored another amazing attraction in Cornwall, The Lost Gardens Of Heligan) decided that he wanted to turn this scar on the landscape in to a beautiful nature reserve.

Eden's main attractions are the two nature biomes. One is the rainforest biome with native plants and small critters and birds it can also get very warm in there. The other biome is the Mediterranean biome it is a lot cooler than the rainforest biome also with little creatures and native plants.

Another main attraction of this beautiful nature reserve is the core. The core is a building with lots of scientific technology. Some of the main things in there include:

- A smoke ring machine

- Dancing aliens

And the egg. The core is a great place to go if you want to see more scientific things rather than the nature side of things.

Overall, the Eden Project is an amazing place to visit and can fill you with all kinds of knowledge.
